Daniel P Brown PhD has been a Clinical Psychologist for over 4 decades, a lecturer and researcher at Harvard Medical School and the Cambridge Hospital Massachusetts (psychotherapy and psychiatry). In addition, he is a Forensic Psychologist, and provided expert testimony in trauma and memory in numerous trials in the United States and as an expert witness at The Hague War Crimes Tribunal, following the war in the former Yugoslavia.

Dr. Brown has been deeply involved in understanding trauma and the training of other clinicians in understanding and treating trauma. Over the last 20 years his research has focused on assessing attachment disorders in adults and on developing psychotherapeutic and hypnotherapeutic protocols to treat attachment pathology.

As a polymath, Dan's expertise extends to trauma treatment, psycho-neuroimmunology, treatment of attachment difficulties, therapeutic uses of hypnosis and guided imagery, evolution of consciousness, and Buddhist meditation.

Across his varied roles, Dr. Brown has:

- Won numerous teaching awards from Harvard University and the American Psychiatric Association, including "Outstanding Contribution to Psychiatry"
- Authored 16 books including the recent text "Attachment Disturbances in Adults: Treatment for Comprehensive Repair" Norton, 2016.
- Been mentored by leading therapists and researchers: Mary Main, Heinz Kohut, Karl Menninger and Erica Fromm.
- Taught by and edited books with, his Holiness the Dalai Lama
- Collaborated with Ken Wilber and Jack Engels in the field of consciousness studies.

Clinical practice is rapidly moving in the direction of evidence-based treatment, i.e. justification of approaches to treatment based on the level of supporting outcomes research. Many clinicians fail to appreciate that most outcomes research is based on widely-used paper-and-pencil self-report inventories that are quick to give and easy to score, and very comprehensive structured clinical interviews that are easy to administer, comprehensive, and highly reliable. Clinicians could easily use these same tools in private or clinic settings, both to make accurate initial diagnoses and to periodically assess treatment progress. The learning objectives of the workshop are:

- To review the best of the self report inventories for depressive, bipolar, psychotic, anxiety, somatoform, dissociative, and personality disorders, addictions/eating disorders and interpersonal relationships.
- To review the best structured interview for PTSD (the CAPS), dissociation (SCID-D), attachment (the AAI), and report validity (the SIRS). Course includes a pack of assessment tools and scoring charts.
